Chapter 1 by Lex

So everyone thinks cartoons are all happy-go-lucky stories...until you find out the truth.

Cartoons are actually sick, twisted, and cruel. They just can't air all the blood and gore and messed up stuff that really happens so they substitute it with happy, cute, stupid stuff.

My first example will be the Power Puff Girls...

First off the Professor isn't the "Professor" he isn't even a scientist, hes a Meth Lab operator, and he didn't create those girls with sugar, spice, and everything nice, he got himself high on acid and threw three innocent girl into a tub of drugs, chemicals, and whatever other crazy stuff he could find. This left three little girls tripping on whatever drugs they'd been soaked with and currently thinking they were super powered when really it was the BIGGEST high in the world. So in all reality these girls are no more than a bunch of trippy, screwed up, high off their ass, kids, and the "Professor" is a totally irresponsible, drug obsessed, idiot.

child's eyes. Although, what was worse than violence being embedded in the child's mind was the fact that the electric charges emitted by Pikachu actually made the TV screens flash and blur which actually caused epileptic attacks among Japanese children. The creator of Pokemon also admitted that the show is very anti-christian. At the age of ten Ash is travelling the world, and his parents permit it (Who does that,) is that really what we want our children thinking is okay? The characters are just depressing, you go out into the world and you're really excited to see the world and capture as many Pokemon as you can, and no one can blame you. Except everyone else that exists in the world. If you were to walk through the entire game and never go back, you would never experience the sadness that the townspeople/other trainers exhibit. Therefore Pokemon is probably the exact opposite of what we want our kids to think is okay.
